Facts and information about Norway --> Click here

Skien is situated in the south of Norway. It is one of Norway's oldest cities. This old Viking town from the 16th century became one of the most important commercial and cultural centers, with an urban history dating back to the Middle Ages.

Skien was historically a center of seafaring, timber exports, and early industrialization and was one of Norway's two or three largest cities between the 16th and 19th centuries. It was also one of Norway's most internationally oriented cities, with extensive contact with its export markets in the Low Countries, the United Kingdom, and Denmark.

The people of Skien are adaptable with the capacity to cope with significant industrial transformations, from heavy industry in the past to more dynamic and innovative businesses today.

Telemark Hospital covers a population base of around 170,000 inhabitants. The central administration is located in Skien. The hospital annually adopts common environmental goals in areas where we can contribute to improvement. All units contribute with measures to achieve the goals.
